TODDLER STACKING SPOOLS

These non-traditional "blocks" help build fine motor control and nurture coordination. Balance each chunky spool on top of one another while playing with concepts in Physical Science. Young engineers can start by threading a straw through the spool hole to practice finding the center of balance.

NESTING CANISTERS

There is something magical about collecting things. Little explorers love to hide-n-seek as they play with the notion of object permanence. These little wooden boxes hide inside one another creating the opportunity for endless peek-a-boo play times. Add them to a sensory bin as a collection spot for treasure and a way to play with the concept of volume.

COLOR SORTING BOWLS

An open ended set for color exploration. Stack them, sort them, or use them as scoops in sensory bins. These little bowls are extremely versatile and compliment many other Mama May I creations.

RAINBOW SKITTLES

This classic game offers practice in balance and coordination. Standing the pins is a learning opportunity met with a rewarding end - demolition! Roll the ball to knock them over while building color vocabulary; learning about cause & effect; and watching things GO!

ANIMAL ACTION

The perfect addition to game night, let these animal friends inspire your family to scurry like a crab or flutter like a butterfly while building vocabulary, spatial awareness, and memories!

LITTLE PEOPLE
RAINBOW WORLD

Playful put-together puzzles, these colorful friends will travel for play. Match, sort, stack, and pretend, these cuties will grow with yours through many milestones and memories.

SENSORY BEANBAGS

These colorful squares are the BEST open-ended play companion. There is so much to be learned simply by holding the different weights, sounds, & textures. Game possibilities are endless!

HIDE-N-SEEK NEIGHBORHOOD

Let your little one make friends with these peek-A-boo cuties. Peek them in and out of their matching color canister or try balancing each friend on top of a matching base. The perfect put-together for young explorers, these little friends are willing to travel from playset to playset and around your home!
